

APPENDIX A

[The transcribed material on pages {923} to {940} consists of the entries made by Dr. John Snow as the end matter of each of his three manuscript volumes of case books. These entries are different in style and content from the majority of his other narrative entries. For clarity, they have been collated in this single section of the transcribed work. The end-matter from the first volume (originally at pages {465} to {467}) is on pages {923} to {925}; pages {926} to {938} contain that from the second (originally at pages {812} to {824}); and pages {939} and {940} that from the final volume (originally at pages {921} and {922}). The numbers in the right-hand column, 538–599, were Snow’s own notation, the significance of which is not clear.]

When I was called to Mr. Anderson he had been bleeding from the nose, but he had stopped it by the application of turpentine on cotton before I arrived. He had large patches of purpura haemorrhagica on his arms, hands, thighs and legs, and some smaller ones on his head. They had come out at various times the three previous days, some of the earlier ones were already fading. There was, in the centre of each patch of purpura, a small hard swelling or nodule, over which the skin was quite white. These nodules felt as hard almost as cartilage, and were proportionate in size to the patches of purpura. Where these were as big as the hand, the nodules were as big as a horse bean; where the patches were smaller so were the nodules. It appeared to me that the nodules probably consisted of fibrin, that the blood had been effused at these points and the fibrin had become congelated whilst the rest of the blood had spread in the skin and under the cuticle. He had been drinking very hard for some time, and eating scarcely anything. His limbs were rather tremulous, pulse bounding but not strong. To take lemon juice, and a tonic with diluted sulphuric acid. He improved during the next three days, the patches faded, and the nodules diminished in size. {935} When called to him on the 18th. I found him to be labouring under erysipelas of the face and head. There had been a little swelling and redness of the right ear on the evening of the 15th. which had since extended. To take Quinine and apply solution of nitrate of silver to the face. The hairy scalp was not so much affected as the face & forehead. (25th. Has gradually improved, and face nearly well.) On the 23rd. he was making very little urine, only two or three ounces in the morning after lying all night. It was clear and of straw colour, sp. gr. 1.015, not albuminous. Feels low. P. 84, not feverish. Has had no fermented liquor since his illness. 30th. A return of the erysipelas in the face
