THE ELECTRONIC WORD

Democracy, Technology, and the Arts

Richard A. Lanham

Lanham's collection of essays explores the challenges posed by digitized text to all of our assumptions about artistic, educational, and political discourse.

To those who view electronic text as a cultural catastrophe, he counters that "electronic expression has come not to destroy the Western arts but to fulfill them."

FALLING INTO THEORY Conflicting Views on Reading Literature

David H. Richter, *Queens College of the City
University of New York*

Foreword by Gerald Graff, University of Chicago

- the first book that enables instructors to “teach the conflicts” in undergraduate literature courses
- 29 selections include both popular press versions of academic debates and accessible scholarly pieces
- organized around three major questions of contemporary literary studies
- general introduction and part introductions point out to students what is at stake in these debates
- brief and affordable

“Just what does ‘teaching the conflicts’ mean, especially when it comes down to what an instructor actually does on an actual Monday morning in a roomful of actual undergraduates? . . . Now, thanks to David Richter, I can refer questioners to a book that not only shows them how to teach the conflicts, but enables them to do it.”

— From the foreword by Gerald Graff, University of Chicago

SIGNS OF LIFE IN THE U.S.A. Readings on Popular Culture for Writers

Sonia Maasik, University of California—Los Angeles
Jack Solomon, California State University—Northridge

- the first composition reader on popular culture with a method for making students into critical thinkers and writers
- adapts semiotics to help college writers understand and analyze American culture and its signs
- 75 readings include exemplary analyses of popular culture and materials for analysis from popular culture
- 10 thematic chapters focus on provocative topics familiar to students
- editorial apparatus is specifically designed for the first-year composition course

“This text strikes me as one whose time has surely come.”

— Kathleen Shine Cain, Merrimack College
