

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

H. DAVID ALLEN is Associate Professor and Chairman of the Department of Sociology at the University of New Orleans. His primary interests are social problems, sociological theory, and sociology of religion. Currently, he is engaged in a study of the origin and transmission of cultural traits legitimating violent behavior.

LAWRENCE BAUM teaches political science at Ohio State University. His current research interests include hierarchical relationships within the judiciary and the impact of specialization on judicial behavior. He is author of The Supreme Court (1981).

ALFRED BLUMSTEIN is currently the J. Erik Johnson Professor in the School of Urban and Public Affairs and Director of the Urban Systems Institute at Carnegie-Mellon University. His research focuses on the criminal justice system. He holds a bachelor's degree in engineering physics and a Ph.D. in operations research, both from Cornell University.

CORINNE DE VOCHT is a research fellow in sociology of law at the University of Antwerp, where she has done research on family law.

LEE EPSTEIN is a graduate student in political science at Emory University and is currently studying interest group litigation.

MAYNARD L. ERICKSON, Professor of Sociology at the University of Arizona, received his Ph.D. from Washington State University. His articles on delinquency and criminology have appeared in various social science journals.

SHELDON GOLDMAN is Professor of Political Science at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. He is author of the recently published Constitutional Law and Supreme Court Decision-Making (1981), and is currently working on the third edition of The Federal Courts as a Political System.

ELIZABETH GRADDY is a Ph.D. candidate in the School of Urban and Public Affairs at Carnegie-Mellon University.

PENNY A. GREEN is currently a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Sociology at the University of Texas at Austin. In addition to her interest in the sociology of law, her other substantive areas include social theory and social differentiation.

KAREN O'CONNOR is an Assistant Professor at Emory University. She received her Ph.D. in political science and J.D. from SUNY-Buffalo, and is the author of Women's Organizations' Use of the Courts. Her current research focuses on interest group participation in Supreme Court litigation.

MICHAEL PHILIPS, Associate Professor of Philosophy at Portland State University, holds a Ph.D. in philosophy from Johns Hopkins University. He specializes in moral and political philosophy and has published papers on Kantian and utilitarian moral theory.

DEAN G. ROJEK, Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Georgia, received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin. His current research is in the area of juvenile delinquency, and he is co-author of Delinquency: A Sociological View.

AUSTIN SARAT, Associate Professor of Political Science at Amherst College, is co-author of The Policy Dilemma (1980). He received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin-Madison in 1973.

ELIZABETH A. STANKO, Assistant Professor of Sociology at Clark University, focuses her research efforts on the everyday decision making of police and prosecutors. She is currently examining institutional responses to female victimization and has co-edited a volume on women, gender roles, and criminal justice.

JEAN VAN HOUTTE is Professor of Sociology and Sociology of Law at the University of Antwerp (University Faculties of St. Ignatius). He is currently working in the fields of sociology of family law and administration of justice.