EDITORIAL POLICY

The British Journal of Political Science is an independent journal, whose policy is set by its editorial board. It is committed to no methodological orthodoxy over and above the normal canons of scholarship: clear and consistent use of words, logical and mathematical validity, and the use of appropriate evidence to substantiate empirical statements. Contributions are invited in all fields of political science, including political philosophy and political sociology. Work addressed to problems of general significance to students of politics will be published whatever the period(s) or place(s) drawn upon for evidence.

New books from CAMBRIDGE

The Politics of Economic Decline

Economic Management and Political Behaviour in Britain since 1964

JAMES E. ALT

This book deals with popular perceptions and expectations of economic trends, popular preferences among economic policies, and the relationships between these and broader aspects of political behaviour like voting, attachment to the party system, and political and social attitudes.

Skills, Outlooks and Passions

A Psychoanalytic Contribution to the Study of Politics

A. F. DAVIES

The first comprehensive review of work in political psychology, this book covers studies which range from technical psychoanalysis to clinical and social psychology; from political science to management; from personality theory to general and political biography. Professor Davies bestows upon these studies an order that is both original and instructive in itself.

Forthcoming (August)

A Proletarian Science

Marxism in Britain 1917-1933

STUART MACINTYRE

Dr Macintyre reconstructs the British understanding of Marxism and measures its influence over a crucial fifteen-year period when the two opposing traditions, one embodied in the Labour Party and the other shaped decisively by the Russian Revolution, were consolidated in the British labour movement.

A Discourse on Property

John Locke and His Adversaries

JAMES TULLY

Using a hermeneutical and analytical approach, Professor Tully elucidates Locke's contribution to the seventeenth-century discussion of method in the moral sciences. In doing so, he overturns the standard interpretations of Locke's theory and shows it to have been a theory of individual use rights within a framework of inclusive claim rights.

A THEORY OF POLITICAL DECISION MODES

Intraparty Decision Making in Switzerland

by Jürg Steiner and Robert H. Dorff

"Jürg Steiner and Robert Dorff have made an important contribution to political science by their elaboration of the conditions and consequences of different modes of decision-making through their intensive empirical study of the Free Democratic Party of the Swiss Canton of Bern. The four decision-modes which they succeeded in isolating—majority, amicable agreement, non-decision, and decision by interpretation—should be generally valuable in discriminating among different patterns of decision-making among different organizations in the same system or among different political systems. [Their book] is a work of great rigor and imaginativeness." —Gabriel A. Almond,

HISTORY OF POLITICAL THOUGHT

*Executive Editors: Janet Coleman and Iain Hampsher-Monk, Politics Dept.
Amory Building, Exeter University, Exeter EX4 4RJ, England.*

History of Political Thought seeks to provide a forum for the interpretation and discussion of political thought in its historical context. It is intended to foster exchange and communication between scholars in the English-speaking world and those on the continent and elsewhere.

The journal is devoted exclusively to the historical study of political ideas and its associated methodological problems. Studies dealing with ancient, medieval, renaissance, early modern and recent political thought are invited. The primary focus is on research papers but from time to time reviews and surveys designed to familiarise students with the 'state of studies' concerning a particular thinker or area of research will be included.

History of Political Thought is published thrice yearly (preceding academic terms) and printed in Exeter by Imprint Academic, 61 Howell Road, Exeter EX4 4EY England.
