David Crump

Jesus the Intercessor

Prayer and Christology in the Luke-Acts

Using the methods of redaction and modern literary criticism, this study examines the theme of prayer in Luke-Acts. Contrary to the tenets of functional/exaltation christology in Lukan studies, it is argued that Luke's Jesus effectively mediates God's revelation in this world as the heavenly Intercessor come to earth. An investigation of the place of heavenly and earthly intercessors in first century Jewish theology provides the comparative background for Luke's biographical treatment of Jesus as the praying, eschatological Prophet, who now intercedes for his people at the right hand of God in heaven.

Die Christen als Fremde

Die Metapher der Fremde in der antiken Welt, im Urchristentum und im 1. Petrusbrief

This work explores the origin and the meaning of the category 'Sojourner' as a metaphorical self-designation of individuals or of groups. The first part illuminates the background of the tradition and its religious history in the pagan literature, in the Old Testament and in early Judaism. Then the second part demonstrates how in the first book of Peter these traditions were received and how they were reworked establishing their interpretation in the subsequent centuries and which remains significant up to today.
