— Teachers and students of insect pathology —

This is an instructional aid for those working in the fields of insect pathology and microbial control of insects. It is based on lectures and practical classes given at a training course held in New Zealand and run by UNESCO, the United Nations Environmental Programme, and the International Cell Research Organisation.

Lecture material and selected references introduce practical exercises in diagnosis, purification, standardisation, and assay of the different groups of pathogens, and cover the safe use of insect viruses and microbial insecticides. The exercises are described in clear stages with full explanation of the method and relevant theory.

"Microbial control of insect pests" brings together information not previously available from a single source. The practicals provide a comprehensive framework on which to develop other similar courses of instruction, and the book can serve as a convenient laboratory manual for students and researchers.
