Call for Papers: The October 2000 issue of The American Journal of Economics and Sociology will have a focus on the broad theme of "City and Country." Interdisciplinary studies are cordially welcomed, as are papers in urban economics and planning and those that draw on perspectives from the history of economic thought. All proposals in the form of 2000–250 word abstracts must be sent to the editor by March 1, 2000, with a target date for delivering the final paper on July 15, 2000. Please write to Professor Laurence S. Moss, Editor, The American Journal of Economics and Sociology, Babson College, Mustard Hall, Babson Park, MA 02457 USA (fax: 617-728-4947; email: LMOS@AOL.COM).

Call for Proposals, HOPE Conference 2002: The 2002 History of Political Economy Conference is being organized by Neil De Marchi and Margaret Schabas and will have as its subject “Economics in the Age of Newton.” The organizers invite proposals of articles that link political economy to natural philosophy and medicine in the period c.1650–1750 and positively encourage topics that range across disciplines and/or over several figures. The resulting set of papers will be presented at a conference to be held at Duke University in April 2002. Papers passing a final review will appear in a volume to be published as a special supplement to HOPE, by Duke University Press. If you are interested in contributing an article, please send an abstract (1000 words), together with a letter of intent, to the editors by March 1, 2000. Contact: Professor Neil De Marchi, Economics Department, Duke University, Durham NC 27706 USA (email: demarchi@econ.duke.edu); Professor Margaret Schabas, Philosophy Department, York University 4700 Keele St., Toronto Canada M3J 1P3 (email: Schabas@yorku.ca).
