
In Memoriam

Constance Holden, Science Writer

We are sad to note the death of Constance Holden, a senior and highly respected writer for the journal Science. She was crushed to death by a security vehicle while cycling home from work on April 12. She had a particular interest in behavior genetics and often featured stories from our community in her widely read weekly column, Random Samples. She had wide cultural interests and was an accomplished painter and classical pianist. One of her paintings is of David Fulker, one of the pioneers of our subject. She was a good friend to our subject and will be missed. We extend our heartfelt sympathies to her husband.
