Making the Empire Work

London and American
Interest Groups, 1690–1790
ALISON GILBERT OLSON

Alison Olson examines the influence of interest group networks working cooperatively in England and America. Between 1640 and 1790 voluntary interest groups emerged in English politics. They began in London and gradually formed loose connections with smaller but similar interests in the English and American provinces. When the London groups became capable of lobbying the national government, they were willing to use their influence on behalf of the provincials as well. This “representation” of the Americans, though never official, was crucial to keeping the colonists content within the empire.

Perry of London

A Family and a Firm on the Seaboard Frontier, 1615–1753
JACOB M. PRICE

The establishment of English colonies in North America and the West Indies in the seventeenth century created new opportunities for trade. Conspicuous among the families who used these opportunities to gain mercantile and social importance was the Perry family of Devon, who created Perry and Lane, by the end of the century the most important London firm trading to the Chesapeake and other parts of North America. Jacob Price traces this family's dealings and shows how their story reveals both the interrelatedness of social, commercial, and political history as well as the forces shaping English mercantile enterprise in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

The Battle of the Frogs and Fairford's Flies

Miracles and the Pulp Press During the English Revolution

Jerome Friedman

The Battle of the Frogs and Fairford's Flies examines 500 newsbooks and pulp publications produced from 1640 to 1660 to determine how the most ordinary Englishmen conceived of the civil war. Friedman enters the world of enchanted belief, superstition, folk religion and magic as he investigates why Englishmen outside Parliamentary circles were only incidentally concerned with the political, economic and religious questions that have so preoccupied scholars of the period.

Racial Violence in Britain, 1882-1958

Panikos Panayi

Irish, Jews, German, Italians, West Indians and Africans, Bengalis, Indians and Pakistanis have all suffered from large-scale, often organized, violence at the hands of their British hosts since the late nineteenth century. This book explains the outbreaks of violence and puts them in the context of other political and economic disturbances.
