Poetry and Its Others

News, Prayer, Song, and the Dialogue of Genres

Jahan Ramazani

“It is delightful to watch Jahan Ramazani do what he does best: delve into poets such as Hopkins, Yeats, Heaney, and Muldoon and show us the nitty-gritty of how their verse works. Anyone who loves poetry is going to come away from this book revitalized, prepared to think complexly about the modes of address that poets employ, as well as the kinds of writing that they habitually echo, distort, take apart, and reassemble.”—Brian M. Reed, University of Washington

Making England Western

Occidentalism, Race, and Imperial Culture

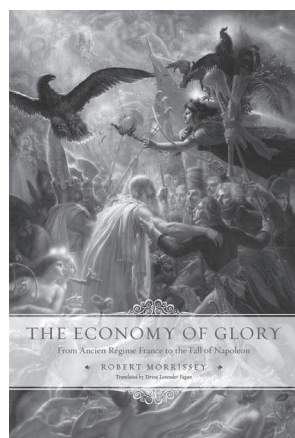

Saree Makdisi

“Saree Makdisi has written a book that in its central line of argument and its detail is thoroughly original and compelling, deeply learned and detailed, erudite and entertaining. His skillful accounts of key Romantic writers and detailed knowledge of English social history and place create a vivid picture of social life and conditions that few literary analyses can boast.”

The Economy of Glory

From Ancien Régime France to the Fall of Napoleon

Robert Morrissey

Translated by Teresa Lavender Fagan

“In this intellectual epic, which charges across centuries and cultures, Robert Morrissey shows how, in Napoleonic times, glory was not simply a selfish pursuit, but the very spring of a regime struggling to synthesize revolutionary equality and aristocratic distinction.”
