

Book Reviews

The book ends with a list of some one hundred of his publications and contributions to the Zentralblatt für Chirurgie. They give some idea of the range of his surgical interests—pyloric resection for stomach cancer, indications for gallstone operation, extirpation of the stellate ganglion, denervation of the heart and its consequences. Sauerbruch was probably his most famous pupil.

This booklet is so brief that it makes an attractive introduction for younger surgeons to the work of one of their continental forebears.
