British School at Athens.

THIS School is designed to give British Students of Greek Archæology and Art the opportunity of pursuing their researches in Greece itself, with command of the means which the recent great advances of the science have rendered indispensable.

Athens is every year becoming more and more the centre of the archæological world. The concentration in the museums there of the numerous and most important discoveries on Greek soil of the last few years has made a personal knowledge of them indispensable to a proper training; they may almost be said to hold a monopoly of the materials for the investigation of prehistoric and early archaic Art. The architecture of Greece can nowhere else be studied to such advantage.

The student requires two auxiliaries when working in Athens—firstly, the command of an adequate library; and secondly, the advice of a trained archæologist residing on the spot, and following the rapid advances of new discovery and the rearrangement of old materials, which often render guides and handbooks almost obsolete as soon as they are published.

These advantages have for many years been enjoyed by French and German, and more recently by American, archæologists, through the Schools which they have established. It is not too much to say that by means of these institutions alone other nations have been able to carry out the researches in Olympia, Delos, and elsewhere, which quite throw into the shade any similar work done by Englishmen since Sir C. T. Newton's famous researches at Halicarnassus thirty years ago. The excavations carried out in Cyprus and in Greece by the British School during the past ten Sessions are an encouraging proof of the work that may be done in the future if the School is adequately supported.

Any students who bring satisfactory testimonials of their qualifications are admitted to enjoy the use of the library of the School and the advice of the Director free of charge. The conditions imposed are that they shall make a serious and systematic study of some branch of Greek archæology, history, or philology, residing for the purpose not less than three months at Athens (or elsewhere in Greek lands); and that they shall at the end of the session give the Director a report of the work which they have done. Such reports become the property of the Committee of the School, for publication or otherwise as they may think fit. Applications from intending students should be made to the Hon. Sec., G. A. MACMILLAN, Esq., 29, Bedford Street, Covent Garden, London. Mr. MACMILLAN will also be happy to supply any further information.

The present income of the School (including the grant of £500 from the Government) is about £1,200 a year, of which a considerable part is secured for three years from this date. Substantial aid is still, however, needed to maintain the School in a permanent state of efficiency. Donations or annual subscriptions will be gladly received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, WALTER LEAF, Esq., 6, Sussex Place, Regent's Park, N.W.
