Front cover: The extravagance and monumentality of Chaco architecture is illustrated by this photograph of Room 242's north elevation in the East Wing of Pueblo Bonito, Chaco Culture National Historic Park. This room lies within the last major addition of about 100 rooms to the 800-room building, a construction episode that dates from AD 1077–1084. Dateable Pinus ponderosa roof beams and lintels in this room were cut between AD 1080 and 1082, and transported at least 70km from Chaco. Two of the building's seven corner doorways lead diagonally out of the second storey of this room to adjacent rooms, which made it one of the most connected rooms in Pueblo Bonito. The height of the ceiling of the second storey from the floor ledge (above the first storey roof) is 2.92m (photograph by Barbara J. Mills; see the Chaco special section inside for further details).
