Trees and Timber in the Ancient Mediterranean World

Russell Meiggs

'Trees and Timber in the Ancient Mediterranean World fills a large and long-felt gap. There is, literally, nothing quite like it in existence. . . . It is hard to convey the sheer pleasure derived from reading a book of this sort: the intellectual appreciation of rigorous research and carefully controlled conclusions, the sympathetic excitement aroused by a scholar so patently in love with his subject and the splendid treasure-trove of factual nuggets that Meiggs has garnered. . . . The list could go on ad infinitum. Everyone who touches this subject in future will have to begin from Meiggs, as the ancient poet from Zeus. He has laid the groundwork and it is sound: solid, scholarly parquet, proof, I would judge, against rot, worm, and time.'
The T.L.S. Illustrated £35

Aristotle's Physics

Books III and IV
Edward Hussey

Books III and IV of the Physics, consisting of five essays on the subjects of change, the infinite, place, void, and time, provide not only one of the earliest surviving examples of the application of Aristotelian dialectic, but also a classic expression of a durable philosophical treatment of these problems. This volume contains a new English translation and a philosophical commentary, with an introduction giving an overall view of Aristotle's position on the topics discussed. £13.50 paperback £6.95

Life in Egypt Under Roman Rule

Naphtali Lewis

This book focuses on the people who lived in Egypt under Roman rule. What were their everyday lives like, in their personal and family affairs, in business matters, in their dealings with officialdom, in the demands made upon them by their government? It surveys the rigidly maintained class structure, life and the means of livelihood in the towns and villages, religion, taxation, law, and the manifestations of popular discontent. Illustrated £15

Trade and Famine in Classical Antiquity
edited by PETER GARNSEY and C. R. WHITTAKER

Trade in antiquity – its scale, status, pattern and context – is the subject of lively debate among historians. But no analysis has made a special investigation of trade in essential food stuffs. Famine and food-crisis are also neglected subjects. This study, originating in papers written for the Eighth International Economic History Congress (Budapest, 16–20 August, 1982) is structured around the two focal points of trade and famine. A theme of the volume is that a combination of natural and artificial shortages made inevitable the bulk movement of staples between regions in all periods of antiquity. Novel contributions are offered in addition in relation to the cost of shipping, the extent of long-distance trade in wine, the relative demand for wheat and barley, the incidence and gravity of food crises, the efficiency of famine-relief measures and the part played by food shortages in the collapse of the late Roman frontier system.

Plato's Arguments for Forms
by ROBERT WILLIAM JORDAN

If we are to understand why Plato had a theory of Forms, we must explain, firstly, why Plato thought it necessary to depart from the ontology of the Socratic dialogues; secondly, why Plato then posited the existence of entities that have the characteristics that Plato ascribes to Forms (entities that are 'unmixed', 'unchanging', 'in every way being' and so on); thirdly, why Plato took this course when other philosophers have not done so (and even he himself and his immediate pupils were later to modify or abandon the theory). Dr Jordan discovers an answer to these questions where we might expect to find one – namely in the arguments Plato gives us in favour of the hypothesis that there are Forms. These arguments, on analysis, reveal not just a concern with the nature of knowledge and explanation; but an interest in the analysis of the apparent contradictions that Plato (in his middle period) thought to be presented to the intellect by the sensible world. These contradictions, he then thought, could not be resolved except by those with knowledge of the Forms.

Orders to be sent to Dr C. Austin, Trinity Hall, Cambridge CB2 1TJ, England.

Price: £12.50 ($30.00) per copy.
