Jurek Becker

A Life in Five Worlds

SANDER L. GILMAN

"Jurek Becker occupied a unique niche in the complex literary landscape of the German Democratic Republic. His life and work were a constantly evolving tightrope act: between Pole and Jew, between Jew and German, between East and West Germany, between communism and dissidence, between high literary ambitions and the demands of writing for film and television. Sander Gilman, who can look back on a thirty-year friendship with Becker, approaches his subject in this book with admirable delicacy and firmness. Written with instinctual insight and the verve of an eyewitness, Jurek Becker: A Life in Five Worlds is a compelling and indispensable biography."—Leo Lensing, Wesleyan University

The Futurist Moment

Avant-Garde, Avant Guerre, and the Language of Rupture
With a new Preface

MARJORIE PERLOFF

"The Futurist Moment is the kind of scholarly book that should be bought in bookstores as well as checked out of libraries. . . . Futurism lasted for only a moment of prewar experiment and enthusiasm, but this book expands that moment and shows how it permeates our own."—Timothy Materer,

The Dominion of the Dead

ROBERT POGUE HARRISON

"Mr. Harrison . . . has a rare poetic intelligence that does not shrink from speculative immensity. . . . In a kind of literary séance, the voices of the dead—poets like Swinburne and Homer, writers like Conrad and Joyce, philosophers like Vico and Heidegger—shape the text. Along the way are a discussion of the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, an interpretation of Christianity's vision of resurrection, and speculation about how grief is inscribed in language. . . . By the end one begins to think differently about the living as well as the dead."

Guys Like Us

Citing Masculinity in Cold War Poetics

MICHAEL DAVIDSON

"Davidson shows us persuasively just how homosocial bonding served to shape much of the American poetry of the cold war era. As fine and subtle and learned an account of the relations among gender, genre, and politics as any I know."

Crimes of Art and Terror

FRANK LENTRICCHIA AND JODY McAULIFFE

"Moving through Stockhausen to a wide range of material, [Lentricchia and McAuliffe] ask the difficult question: is Western art's post-Romantic veneration of the destructive, alienated outsider—from Oedipus to Travis Bickle—in any way answerable for the real destruction our culture brings into being? . . . The book's accessible combination of conceptual daring and moral seriousness places it well above the common run of lit crit."

Literature after Feminism

RITA FELSKI

"Felski . . . here offers an eloquent apologetic for feminist literary criticism, revealing its diversity, celebrating its great influence on the teaching of literature, and showing its development far beyond the stereotypes imposed by its critics. In the process, she provides a penetrating analysis of fiction and the ways in which feminist criticism has changed its authors, plots, and values and the perceptions of the general public."

Now in paper Signifying God

Social Relation and Symbolic Act in the York Corpus Christi Plays

SARAH BECKWITH

"[Beckwith is] at the forefront of small group of scholars who study in any depth the traditions of English medieval drama. . . . Her work remains among the most thoughtful in the still-burgeoning area of medieval English drama scholarship."
