AIMS AND SCOPE

The European Review is an Interdisciplinary Review Journal of the Academia Europaea. The contents reflect the broad range of disciplines included within the Academia, as well as its comprehensive European membership. The review will thus include articles covering a wide range of topics written so as to make them accessible to readers from other disciplines. Each issue will include a special section focused on a particular topic. The articles will be by authors mostly located in Europe and some will relate to specifically European questions.

Authorship is in no way restricted to members of the Academia Europaea and the Editors welcome submissions.

ACADEMIA EUROPAEA

The Academia Europaea was established in 1988 to bring together scholars from across Europe, East and West, of all academic disciplines. It has already proved to be an admirable medium for tackling problems on a Europe wide basis and especially on an interdisciplinary basis—bringing together scholars from disciplines that would be unlikely to meet otherwise. It organizes symposia at annual meetings which move around Europe and which have covered subjects like the Rights of Minority Groups, the Image of Science, the Study of the Human Genome, Population Migration, and the Search for Meaning in Contemporary Life. It has also established study groups, the first of which has published its findings in a book on 'Schooling in Contemporary European Society'. Other studies are in progress on Problems of Youth in a Changing Europe, Energy Forecasting, Higher Education, Teaching Science in Schools, Social Aspects of Science Policy, and the Idea of Progress.

It can be seen that the Academia Europaea has a wide perspective and this is reflected in this Review.

The Academia is an independent organization based in London.

Note from the Editor

The European Review enters its fourth year in a slightly changed format, but its objectives remain unchanged, namely to publish scholarly articles on interdisciplinary subjects mostly with an emphasis on Europe. The range covered can be judged by the contents of Volume 3 which are reproduced at the back of this issue. The Academia Europaea has decided that in future the Review will be sent to all its members commencing with this issue. I hope that members will enjoy reading the Review, and this will encourage them to contribute articles which will be warmly welcomed.

However, the Review is certainly not a 'house' journal and we welcome contributions from all our readers. If you know of colleagues who might be interested in the Review, please let us know and we will be happy to mail them a copy of a recent issue.
