RACE

A Journal of Race and Group Relations

The Institute of Race Relations, 36 Jermyn Street, London, SW1Y 6DU

The journal provides contributions to the study of race relations from a wide range of academic and applied disciplines. Some emphasis is placed on articles contributing to the debate on policy and structural change. As well as articles, most numbers include 'Quarterly Forum' – which carries discussion on methods, and reports on organizations, conferences, and programmes – Correspondence, Book Reviews, and Books Received. One number in each volume will be devoted to a special issue: the April 1972 number will be on 'Race and Social Stratification'.

THE HARVARD EDUCATIONAL REVIEW is a journal combining these characteristics as well as providing an interdisciplinary forum for the discussion of issues and research relevant to education. Its scope is as broad as the concerns of the school, their students and teachers, and the community.

In addition to original articles and essay book reviews, it contains Report Analyses on current topics. A Letters-to-the-Editors Section allows readers the opportunity to participate in an interchange of ideas.

Special Issues have dealt with such subjects as Equal Educational Opportunity, Architecture and Education, Political Socialization, Language and Learning and American Intellectuals and the Schools.

Choice and the Politics of Allocation

A Developmental Theory

by David E. Apter

The problem of choice, its expansion and control, is David Apter's central concern in this book. Using a highly abstract analytical system, with development and order as dependent variables, he derives a series of behavioral propositions and compares them in modernizing and industrial societies. In what will undoubtedly be a controversial final chapter he suggests a radical equilibrium theory in which his structural conclusions are shown to work best in the context of a socialist liberal ethic. $7.95

Unions, Parties, and Political Development

A Study of Mineworkers in Zambia

by Robert H. Bates

Like most new nations, Zambia aspires to rapid economic development. Because the economy is based largely on copper production, regulation and control of the copper miners represents a crucial political task for Zambia's ambitious elite. In this study Robert Bates analyzes the attempt of the government to use the dominant political party and the Mineworkers' Union to enforce a relatively strict labor code. Since governments throughout Africa striving for economic maturity are struggling with similar problems, Bates' findings have a relevance beyond Zambia. "This study presents the best analysis that I have seen of relations between a trade union and a political party in a new African state."—Richard L. Sklar. $12.50

Political Roles in a New State Tanzania's First Decade

by Raymond F. Hopkins

The Tanzanian experiment with its essentially agricultural approach to development, the continuing effort by its leadership to make political parties a vital force in domestic politics, and its attempts to deal with the problems of tribalism continues to merit serious investigation. In this study, based on field work in Tanzania that included interviews with 109 administrators and legislators, Mr Hopkins examines Tanzania's political system as reflected in the character of role expectations among the elite. He finds a closed system of politics developing in Tanzania that is based on consensual role expectations, and suggests that this could be a way to avoid the conflicts and violence common to many developing countries.

West African Travels and Adventures

Two Autobiographical Narratives from Northern Nigeria translated and annotated by Anthony Kirk-Greene and Paul Newman

In 1855 an outstanding explorer of Africa, Heinrich Barth, took two Nigerian boys—Dorugu and Abbega—back to England with him. Dorugu dictated a memoir recounting his early life and travels with Barth. It is a sharp, often humorous commentary on northern Nigeria and records, as well, a young African's first look at European culture. Years later, Abbega's grandson Maimaina chronicled his adventures as political agent and interpreter with the British expeditionary force that established control over northern Nigeria at the turn of the century. These two narratives redress the conspicuous lack of autobiographical material in English from northern Nigeria. $10.00

THE JOURNAL OF MODERN AFRICAN STUDIES

The Journal offers a quarterly survey of politics, economics, and related topics in contemporary Africa.

The main emphasis is upon the peoples and policies, the problems and progress of this dynamic and disparate continent; upon the many societies that are evolving rather than the essential characteristics of the old; upon the present, not on the more distant past. The best current work is sought from specialists in different academic disciplines, whose contributions can illuminate and cross-fertilise one another.

The Journal seeks to promote a deeper understanding of what is happening in Africa today. It is intended for both the political scientist and the practical politician, the administrator and the advocate, the economist and the educator, the banker and the businessman, the diplomat and the technocrat, the civil servant and the nationalist leader. All have something to contribute to these pages and, it is hoped, much to learn from them.

Editorial policy avoids commitment to any political viewpoint or ideology, whether imperialism, pan-Africanism, capitalism, socialism, or nationalism. Such concepts, however, have relevance to the modern African situation, and merit serious discussion, often from several different points of view, in order that controversial issues may be fairly examined.

Contributors of accepted articles will be asked to assign their copyright, on certain conditions, to Cambridge University Press, to help protect their material, particularly in the U.S.A.
