

THE THIRSTY SWORD

Sirat 'Antar and the Arabic Popular Epic

The first analysis of the written version of Sirat 'Antar, a point of culmination in the rich genre of premodern Arabic epic. Filled with battle and romance, Sirat 'Antar purports to recount the life story of Antar ibn Shaddad, who begins life as a black slave, but through his military prowess, personal nobility, and poetic talent wins freedom and achieves fame as a hero and acquires renown as the lover of his beautiful cousin, 'Abla. By exploring the epic's scholarly reception, hermeneutical context, historical background, and narrative structure, Peter Heath redresses a gap in the study of Arabic popular literature.

THE POLITICS OF REGIONAL TRADE
IN IRAQ, ARABIA,
AND THE GULF, 1745-1900

Hala Fattah

“This is an extraordinarily important study that is path-breaking not only in its overall conceptualization but also in its extensive and intelligent use of Iraqi and other Gulf sources. There is nothing quite like it in the existing literature, virtually guaranteeing that it will make a splash, at least in scholarly circles.” — Fred Lawson,

Mills College

This history of trade in Iraq, Arabia, and the Gulf basin over the course of 150 years establishes the interconnectedness of the Gulf region by charting the regional ties that bound disparate districts together through long-distance trade networks. Hala Fattah redraws the parameters of the history of this area, tracing the social history of the regional market from its beginnings to its last-ditch efforts to stand up to the onslaught of superior firepower, more efficient technology, and the inexorable rise of the world market.

Moniru Ravanipur

Edited with an Introduction by
M.R. Ghanoonparvar

Women writers occupy prominent positions in contemporary Iranian literature, despite the increased legal and cultural restrictions placed upon women since the 1978-1979 Islamic Revolution. Satan's Stones is the first English translation of the 1991 short story collection Sangha-ye Sheytan, by acclaimed author Moniru Ravanipur. Often set in the remote regions of Iran, these stories explore many facets of contemporary Iranian life, particularly the ever-shifting relations between women and men. The frank explorations of Iranian society offer Western readers fresh perspectives on Iranian culture from one of the country's most distinguished writers.

SOCIETY AND HISTORY

Editor

RAYMOND GREW

University of Michigan

Comparative Studies in Society and History is an international forum for scholars in the social sciences and humanities. Its articles present significant research on societies of every era from pre-history to the present and on every continent. CSSH brings together multidisciplinary research, cultural studies, and theory, emphasizing innovative work in the social sciences, especially anthropology, history, political science, and sociology. In each section, articles on a particular question are grouped together to stimulate comparison of diverse cases. Also included in each issue are CSSH Notes and book reviews.

Forthcoming contents include:

THE ARABIC BOOK CLUB (Al-Kitab Al-Arabi) is set to promote Arabic Books. The CLUB through its quarterly magazine intends to reach thousands of Arabic readers in the U.S.A., Canada, Australia, Eastern and Western Europe, as well as readers in the Arab and Islamic countries. The CLUB also operates as a Publisher.

Hundreds of Arabic books are published annually all over the World. We have made arrangements with most publishers in 21 Arab countries, as well as other publishers of Arabic books in Europe. They will supply us regularly with their most recent publications. Our editorial advisory board will choose ten books per issue to summarize. Each summary will be around ten pages. These summaries would be a combination of a digest and skillful distillation that preserves the content and the spirit of the entire book. In addition we would also publish one-page bibliographies of other books of merit. In the last section of Al-Kitab Al-Arabi we would publish a simple listing of titles and authors of the remainder of the publications we receive from publishers.

Authors, established and aspiring, are invited to use our publishing and distribution facilities. We publish English as well as Arabic books. Contact us on the following address;
