
Editorial

The main contents of each issue of the World's Poultry Science Journal are scientific and technical reviews, however, as regular readers know, other kinds of material are included. Among these are Working Group Reports – which appear under this heading – and reports on aspects of the poultry industry in particular countries or regions. These will in future be included under the heading Regional Reports. Such sub-division is logical because referees apply different criteria when considering papers of these kinds, in particular, whether the information is likely to have sufficient general interest.

With this issue of the journal the publication schedule should have regained some of its lost credibility. Having now overcome various problems that arose from the major changes to production arrangements, the editors will try to ensure that future time keeping will be more satisfactory.

Chris Hann