British Foreign Policy 1945–1973

Joseph Frankel

Britain, one of the Big Three in 1945, had by 1973 readjusted her foreign policy to the role of a regionally oriented middle power. Professor Frankel traces the reasons for this change of position and the problems which caused it. He considers the influences which have affected decision-making in the field of foreign affairs, and after covering all the major policy areas he draws not unfavourable conclusions for the future. £6.95

Secrecy and Foreign Policy

Edited by Thomas M. Franck
and Edward Weisband

These essays explore the delicate balance between a democratic government's need for a free flow of information and the reliance of all governments upon secrecy in making and conducting foreign policy. Government personnel, journalists, and scholars from Canada, Great Britain, and the United States have contributed articles on aspects of this problem. £8.75 OUP New York

Geography and Politics in a World Divided

Saul B. Cohen

Arguing that the order of relations among states and larger regions is inherent in the ecology of the global political system, Professor Cohen first discusses the earth's geopolitical foundations and the nature of political geography. He then examines the major world power cores in terms of their geopolitical environments, maintaining that without these spheres of influence there would be either a monolithic world system or utter chaos. Second edition paper covers £2.30 OUP New York

The United States and West Germany 1945–1973

A Study in Alliance Politics

Roger Morgan

The author tells accurately and clearly the story of a relationship which underwent striking changes between the unconditional surrender of the Third Reich in 1945 and Willy Brandt's Harvard oration in 1972, offering Europe's thanks to America for the Marshall Plan. He presents the elements of this story so as to bring out its significance as a case-study in the politics of alliance. £7 Royal Institute of International Affairs

THE SURROGATE PROLETARIAT

Moslem Women and Revolutionary Strategies in Soviet Central Asia, 1919-1929

Gregory L. Massell's study concentrates on the development of female roles in revolutionary modernisation. Women in Moslem societies were segregated, exploited, and degraded; they were, therefore, a structural weak point in the traditional order—a surrogate proletariat. Through this potentially subversive group, it was believed, intense conflicts could be generated within society which would lead to its disintegration and subsequent reconstitution.

WALTER STRUVE
ELITES AGAINST DEMOCRACY

Leadership Ideals in Bourgeois Political Thought in Germany, 1890-1933

"It is an extremely significant contribution, an effective addition to the method of intellectual history, and a consequential thesis that is new and very instructive. Struve has pulled together vast amounts of data from inaccessible sources and made a meaningful whole of it. In the process he has done much to explain the receptivity to Nazism of many Germans. His material on various thinkers should make the book of wide interest, far beyond the field of German history."—William S. Allen

The Economic Theory of Representative Government

ALBERT BRETON

Aldine Treatises in Modern Economics

General Editor:
Harry G. Johnson

Political scientists and economists have now come to realise that issues of public policy and public finance cannot be solved on the naive assumption that these are problems tackled by a government that exists only to serve the public good. Instead, government must be understood as one of the major economic institutions of society and one that behaves like more familiar economic institutions—the household and the firm—though the market it confronts is a market for policies rather than for goods and services.

Dr. Breton's main purpose is to provide a theory capable of 'explaining' the patterns of public expenditure and taxation that occur under representative government in the light of this new knowledge. It is a pathbreaking work which goes a long way towards enabling us to comprehend the observed behaviour of our enormously important political institutions.

How Communist States Change Their Rulers

Myron Rush

The general character of Communist politics is viewed here from the special perspective provided by examining change at the summit of leadership. Professor Rush is concerned with how top leaders in Communist states in Eastern Europe and China prepare for their succession, what circumstances cause them to leave office, and how their successors come to power. After identifying the key elements in the succession process, he discusses specific instances such as those involving Novotny, Gomulka, and Ulbricht, and he offers a keen analysis of the pending successions in China and Yugoslavia, particularly the efforts made by Mao and Tito to anticipate them.
