

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

NILS CHRISTIE is Professor of Criminology in the Faculty of Law, University of Oslo. He has written books and articles on the sociology of several Scandinavian "welfare laws" including the article, "Temperance Boards and Interinstitutional Dilemmas: A Case Study of a Welfare Law," in a 1965 issue of Social Problems. He has recently been engaged in a study of crime and social control in a small community in northern Norway. Primary among his academic interests are criminology and the sociology of law.

BRUCE COX is Assistant Professor of Anthropology in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology of Carleton University. He is author of the essay, "What is Hopi Gossip About? Information Management and Hopi Factions," in the February 1970 issue of Man, and was instrumental in the establishment of The Western Canadian Journal of Anthropology. His main areas of interest are political anthropology, law and society, and the Indians of North America.

BRENDA DANET is a Professor in the Sociology Department and Communications Institute of the Hebrew University, and a Research Associate at the Israel Institute of Applied Social Research. She is coeditor with Elihu Katz of the forthcoming book, Bureaucracy and the Public: A Reader in Official-Client Relations. Her research interests are in interpersonal and intercultural communication, sociolinguistics, and bureaucracy and the public.

GORDON S. DREVER is a graduate student in anthropology at Brandeis University. He spent the past summer doing limited ethnographic research in a village in Mexico which produces salt by traditional methods of evaporation, focusing on the economic relations involved. His primary interest is social anthropology.

MICHAEL GUREVITCH is a Professor in the Sociology Department and Communications Institute of the Hebrew University, as well as a Research Associate at the Israel Institute of Applied Social Research. He is currently on leave at the Center for Mass Communication Research at the University of Leicester.

JOEL F. HANDLER is Professor of Law at the Wisconsin Law School and a member of both the New Jersey and Illinois Bar Associations. He has published articles in several legal journals and is author of the book The Lawyer and His Community: The Practicing Bar in a Middle-Sized City.

GUDMUND R. IVERSEN is Assistant Professor of Sociology and Research Associate in the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan. He is interested in the use of statistics in the social sciences and is currently working on a new curriculum for teaching statistics in political science and sociology.

LINDA MAHAN is a graduate student in sociology at the University of Illinois. Her major area of academic interest is social psychology.

GLORIA COUNT-VAN MANEN is Assistant Professor of Criminology and Deviance at Howard University. She is the author of the article, "Father Roles and Adolescent Socialization," in the Summer 1968 issue of Adolescence. Her primary area of academic interest is deviance.

GILA SCHWARTZ is a graduate student in the Communications Institute of the Hebrew University and a Research Assistant at the Israel Institute of Applied Social Research. She is coauthor with Michael Gurevitch of the article, "Television and the Sabbath Culture," in the May 1970 issue of P'tacheem. Her interests are in mass communication, sociolinguistics, and popular culture.

RITA JAMES SIMON is Professor and head of the Sociology Department at the University of Illinois. She is presently teaching at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and doing research on the values and aspirations of fathers and sons in various Israeli ethnic communities. She is author of the book The Jury and the Plea of Insanity. Her main areas of interest are the sociology of law, public opinion, and political sociology.

RALPH K. WINTER, Jr., is Professor of Law at Yale University. He has published several articles in various legal journals and is near completion of a book on collective bargaining in the public sector. His areas of special academic interest are business units, constitutional law, evidence, labor law, and torts.