COVER PICTURE		Otto Neumann Sverdrup (1855–1930). Sverdrup was a member of Fridtjof Nansen's expedition that made the first crossing of Greenland (1888–1889). He then was the captain of Fram on the Arctic drift (1893–1896) of that ship. One hundred years ago, on 24 June 1898, Sverdrup left Norway as the expedition leader of the second voyage of Fram , the goal of which was to explore the north coast of Greenland. Although that was not accomplished, the expedition remained in the Canadian high Arctic until the summer of 1902, during which time its members discovered Axel Heiberg, Ellef Ringnes, and Amund Ringnes islands — now collectively known as the Sverdrup Islands. In addition, they explored most of the west coast of Ellesmere Island.
