AJIL generally follows the footnote style of A Uniform System of Citation, published by the Harvard Law Review Association. The fifteenth edition (1991), now entitled The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation, has made various changes in the rules. Those submitting manuscripts to the Journal who do not have access to The Bluebook should note that the full name of the author, editor and/or translator of books should be provided, as well as the full name of the author of articles in periodicals. Authors of signed, student-written materials should also be fully identified. It is no longer necessary, however, to include column numbers in references to newspaper articles.
