COVER PHOTO

Dr. Edward Wilson's drawings and paintings of the Antarctic and its wildlife are well known. There are several books devoted to his art and his pictures have often been reproduced in other books. Less well known is that he painted the bacteriology cultures made by Dr Reginald Koettlitz on R.F. Scott's Discovery expedition. Three of these paintings are in the archives of the Natural History Museum and three are reproduced (we think for the first time and by kind permission of the Natural History Museum) in this issue of the journal. See the article by Henry Guly.
