Italian Film in the Light of Neorealism

Millicent Marcus

"This is unquestionably one of the best works on Italian cinema I have read in any language....an exceptional work that will become an instant classic on publication. It will be must reading for anyone interested in Italian culture in any way."

—Ben Lawton, Purdue University

The movement known as neorealism lasted seven years, generated only twenty-one films, failed at the box office, and fell short of its didactic and aesthetic aspirations. Yet, it exerted such a profound influence on Italian cinema that all the best postwar directors had to come to terms with it, whether in seeming imitation (the early Olmi), in commercial exploitation (the middle Comencini), or in ostensible rejection (the recent Tavianis). Despite the reactionary pressures of the marketplace and the highly personalized visions of Fellini, Antonioni, and Visconti, Italian cinema has maintained its moral commitment to use the medium in socially responsible ways—if not to change the world, as the first neorealists hoped, then at least to move filmgoers to face the pressing economic, political, and human problems in their midst. From Rossellini's Open City (1945) to the Taviani brothers' Night of the Shooting Stars (1982), the author does close readings of seventeen films that tell the story of neorealism's evolving influence on Italian postwar cinematic expression.

Film in the Aura of Art

Dudley Andrew

"These essays are clear, passionate, and compelling, and exemplify, in a unique and significant way, Andrew's critical position."

—Nick Browne, University of California at Los Angeles

In essays on the work of nine important filmmakers (Griffith, Murnau, Vigo, Capra, Delannoy, Bresson, Olivier, Welles, and Mizoguchi), Dudley Andrew examines films that demanded of their first audiences—and still demand of us—the concentration provoked by masterpieces of painting, music, or poetry.

18 pages of illustrations.
